

<http://www.specialneedsjungle.com/autism-in-pink-helping-to-identify-undiagnosed-girls-with-asd/>

A highly informative website for families and professionals providing a range of links and expression of views/discussion/current research/resources on the range of areas of SEN

SPECIAL NEEDS JUNGLE
Parent-led information, resources & informed opinion about Children & Young People with
SEN + Special Needs + Disability + Health Conditions + Rare Diseases

Home About Columnists Health Ask IPSEA SEND Info EHCP Transfer Clinic Resources SEND Research LogIn/Join

Don't miss another post! You know it makes sense!

Enter your email address to be notified of new posts

Email Address

Tell me about new posts!

GET STARTED SEND CHECKLIST

EHCP TRANSFER

Special Needs Jungle » anti-bullying » Autism in Pink: Helping to identify undiagnosed girls with ASD

Search OK

« SEN Code of Practice: what does this look like in Schools? » Mencap celebrate firsts for Learning Disability Week »

Autism in Pink: Helping to identify undiagnosed girls with ASD

By Tania Timaoro | June 19, 2014 |

Follow 338

Like 817 people like this. Sign Up to see what your friends like.

Share Share Pin Share Tweet Mail Share

Autism used to be thought to be mainly a male preserve - "the extreme male brain" as described by Prof. Simon Baron-Cohen. Figures from a recent Prevalence Study by the NAS show that it is more than three times more prevalent in boys than in girls But increasingly, autism, and in particular Asperger Syndrome, is being more recognised in girls. We are not talking here about the severe, non-verbal classic autism that is not easy to miss

Donate

Donate

Mastercard Visa American Express

Find SNJ on Facebook

SPECIAL NEEDS JUNGLE Special N... 14k likes

News, information & info about special educational needs, children's physical & in particular

Like Page

Read articles about: